

Secondary education abroad: safety, technology, innovation

Who has not dreamed to study in a private school in the UK or the US? Modern classrooms, comfortable hostels and the ability to choose everything from eSports to the rate of investment. We have compiled for you a step by step guide that will help you become a high school student in England, Switzerland or the United States.

Step 1. Select country

To select the country in which the training will be efficient and comfortable, you should consider your personal preferences, way of thinking and life style.

According to the statistics in the ranking of countries that CIS people often choose to receive secondary education in the USA, UK and Switzerland.

USA. Every year America spends around $ 600 billion on education. This is a technologically advanced country that allows to successfully combine theoretical knowledge with practice. In the training of teachers oriented to the professions of the future, encourage students consciously to use the latest technology and study computer science.

UK. The country is constantly developing in the field of educational industry, but students may have problems with employment after graduation. To get the practice in the UK, you need to be a step above its peers, because the competition among foreign students is large.

Switzerland. Beautiful, peaceful and safe country. Secondary education is one of the best in Europe. Depending on the region, education in schools is carried out in French, German or Italian. In some schools you can learn English.

Step 2. To prioritize

Moving to another country – it's a big step, so it is important to properly assess their own capabilities. Is the American testing technology, which helps to understand the tendencies and preferences of adolescents. This technique is used by major American companies, selecting job candidates. The main purpose of such testing is – choose a country and school where the pupil / student will be able to better Express themselves, despite their abilities and talents.

Step 3. Psychological preparation

Psychologists believe that the decisive period of formation of the personality is 12 years old. It was at this time the teenager begins to identify themselves to the adult world, learning to make their own decisions, form their interests and preferences. So 12-13 years – this is the best time to start teaching abroad.

Important is also the security issue, because a new country, new people – it is a challenge not only for students but also for parents. When it comes to the protection of children, each school has its own rules. For help me write my paper example, in the U.S. pensions of the open type it is not always possible to trace where is the student, so there is often practiced using a GPS. Also the doors have sensors that monitor their opening and closing at night.

Step 4. To get to the destination

Often parents do not want to let children travel alone to a foreign country. There are two possible options. First – to take advantage of the airline UM, when the flight attendant takes responsibility for the child, watching him in flight and transmits the representative of the school upon arrival. Or to sign a contract with the educational Agency. His staff does not accompany the student, but also helps with the settlement, familiar with the rules of the school.

Step 5. Prepare for your future profession

In the best schools in the world students prepared for the career market of the future from the first day of training. In the US, for example, students with first class learning robotics, anyone can join the club NASA or UNICEF, to enroll in courses on globalization, investment or personal branding. There are even virtual debate, the winners of which can make a report to the UN. The schools also spread e-sports, learn to meditate, and properly unload your school day.

Training in another country – it is an incredible experience and a test of responsibility and independence. Not everyone can afford to get an education abroad, but if there's a chance, you should try and not let those who gave you such an opportunity.
